Behavioral Health Care Manager Qualifications: Minimum Requirements Across State Medicaid Agencies

The Collaborative Care Model (CoCM) is one of the most evidence-based approaches for integrating mental health care into primary care settings. In this model, an interdisciplinary team including a primary care provider (PCP) or specialty medical provider (e.g., OB-GYN, cardiologist, etc.), a psychiatric consultant (PC), and a behavioral health care manager (BHCM) collaborate to deliver high-quality, data-driven, patient-centered care. This integrated approach uses universal screening, measurement-based care, and care coordination to improve early detection, treatment, and relapse prevention for mental health conditions like depression and anxiety. CoCM is the only integrated behavioral health model with designated billing codes which support the financial sustainability of the model. CoCM billing codes are time-based and reflect the total amount of clinical time the BHCM spends engaging in patient care activities under the direction of the PCP, in collaboration with the PC, over the course of a calendar month.

Under Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) guidelines, a BHCM may be a designated provider with formal education or specialized training in behavioral health, including social work, nursing, or psychology, working under the oversight and direction of the billing practitioner when serving a Medicare patient. However, state Medicaid agencies vary in their requirements with some following CMS guidelines, while others set stricter requirements.

The following section outlines the minimum BHCM qualifications required by state Medicaid agency to bill for CoCM services. Grayed-out states have not adopted CoCM billing codes and therefore do not reimburse these services. States labeled “NWG” indicate that either no written guidance on BHCM education or licensure requirements has been published or no such guidance was located.

The information was compiled through extensive review of state Medicaid websites and policies, confirmation from state Medicaid agency representatives, and other publicly available guidance. While this serves as a useful guide, we recommend confirming details with the state Medicaid agency and applicable managed care organizations (MCO).
